

Many of us are carefully watching your upcoming decision with great trepidation. We believe that the danger of locking in place rules which, in the future, could enable control of the media to fall into the hands of a relatively few corporations far outweighs the possible price reductions that could result from possible increased competition, even when new media sources are considered.

Additionally, I believe that UHF stations deserve equal weighting when counting the number of stations controlled by each company.

As a political independent I would view a major relaxation of the rules as another piece in an emerging pattern of handing over of power by the Republicans from the people to the corporations. And it will not be forgotten come the next election.
